

Why People Are Investing In Australia

Whether you are studying, working, travelling or deciding to settle in Australia, it is an attractive destination, with gorgeous beaches, geographical formations, tropical rainforests and minimal diverse population.

The warm climate and affordable property prices also see's people from all around the world investing in the Australian property market. Houses are more affordable, and the Australian Banks massive interest rate cut in 2008, helped not only existing home owners to meet their repayments but also attracted worldwide investors.

More, and more people visit Australia each year and the country now boasts one of the strongest economies in the world. Like its neighbouring countries, such as New Zealand and Canada, Australia is also a good investment arena. Tourism is one of the main industries, with people from all over the globe, visiting the country all year round.

Major cities such as Canberra, Melbourne, Perth and Sydney see the highest property prices, however, as you move out, suburb by suburb, prices decrease and a good investment can still be found. Tourism is on the increase, so investing in real estate associated with the tourism industry will not only reward you with a rental income but also see a handsome return on your investment only after a few years.

Buying property for foreigners is fairly simple, however, permission from the FIRB (Foreign Investment Review Board) must first be received and this can take up to six to eight weeks.

Over the last twenty years or so years there has been a significant rise in buyers investing in more rural real estate, which have much lower price tags, but are relatively near a public commute gateway. This type of property is also becoming more popular with tourists. A substantial deposit will be needed if you are looking at investing in main cities. As in most other countries, real estate in main areas like this also come with a much higher price tag.

Property associated with the tourism industry is also popular. Many people backpack or holiday to Australia every year so demand for both small apartments and holiday homes is always high. Smart investors can make a tidy profit from their investors and also quite a handsome rental income.

Real Estate prices, throughout Australia, have remained stable, even throughout the global economic crisis, and wise investors are making the most from cheaper real estate prices in the surrounding suburbs. Thanks to strict Government lending rules, repossessions have been kept to a minimum, making Australia a good investment destination for many an investor.

Whether you are purchasing a rural property, rental apartment, holiday home, permanent residence or commercial property there are still many good investment opportunities available throughout Australia and any smart investor can receive a nice return on their investment.
