

Rights Assured - Domestic Help Wanted

A job is using your skills to serve the needs of others in exchange for something. Since all jobs are based on a mutual relationship, it should be based on a contract to protect both parties. Unlike the common knowledge of others, domestic helper jobs have also the same protection as that of others, so employers also have the same rights. Domestic Help Wanted everywhere is just the same as there are high demand for nurses, engineers and doctors.

For Domestic helpers who feel less than most employers, for those who are just to experience their first work abroad or for those who are simply no aware of the law, it's about time to memorize these rights that can only be helpful to anybody.

Becoming part of the household a domestic help wanted must be provided with all the necessary amenities to be able to live-not just merely to survive but to live in a home the same way as all others living there. First a room with enough space should be given to the helper, inclusions are the bed, enough blankets, clean sheets and mattresses and perfect air circulation. This should be considered as a private room with no permission from others to enter unless necessary.

The fair working hours granted to employees should not exceed the minimum which is about 8-10 hours. Proper compensation is given for over time work. This rule is applicable anywhere in the world. Also somewhere in between those 8 or ten hours are necessary breaks and one whole day of rest without work. The domestic helper has the privilege to decide where to spend the free day off.

Domestic helpers must seek the job where they are financially compensated and where their rights are equally respected. As part of the country's work force they are entitled to special privileges also. Domestic Help Wanted worldwide must not just be filled but rightfully served.
